Operation Yellow Sentinel

Naked and Free Magazine

volume fifteen

featuring Helmi Niinisto

Helmi is a rustic and rugged 11 year old girl. Her favorite color is blue and her favorite flower is violets.

Helmi lives in a northern European country, and she feels very happy about her lifestyle. Nudity is no big deal where she lives, and that made it easy for her to get into nude modeling. University art students love hiring her to pose for them, and she loves the attention and interest.

Helmi likes to spend a lot of time in the forests, wandering around naked among the trees. In the summer time, she likes to pick the wild berries in the forest while she's completely nude.

In the winter time, Helmi loves to run naked in the snow for a few minutes, then go into the sauna and have a nice hot stream.

Naked and Free Magazine

volume seventeen

featuring Helmi Niinisto

Helmi was featured in a past Naked and Free Magazine, and several years have passed. Now Helmi has blossomed into a big-breasted and voluptuous 16 year old.

Helmi has been sexually active for a few years now, and she has experimented with having sex with girls. She likes it, and she thinks girls are fun, but she's not sure yet if she's bisexual or not.

Nude modeling has allowed Helmi to meet a lot of cute and sexy guys, and she doesn't ever hesitate to show a man just how interested she is in him. Helmi's not afraid to make the first move.

Helmi has found that older guys are better at pleasing her, and giving her great orgasms. But younger guys are more teachable, and she doesn't mind being the boss in the bedroom.

Operation Yellow Sentinel

Approximately one hundred and twenty five years ago, give or take a couple decades, lifestyle clubs and associations adopted a viewpoint of nudism. It was a rather abstract philosophy of living a normal life, just without any clothes on. This caused much backlash in modest societies around the world, and it caused a lot of persecution for nudists in some areas. Much of Europe was more open to this new nude lifestyle, and it blossomed there, before spreading to the United States a couple decades later. In Germany, the rise of the Nazi party in 1933 lead to Nazi proclamations and declaration banning nudism as a threat to German purity and health. However, by 1933 it was such an established lifestyle that by 1945 when the Nazi regime collapsed there had been almost no arrests under anti-nudism laws. In the post-war years, nudism flourished in German, and German society almost completely accepted public nudity, even where it wasn't technically allowed.

In the 1950s and 1960s, nudist magazines became very popular all around the world. The massive appeal sent shock waves throughout a world that was in a state of social and political upheaval. In the United States, there were many attempts by the United States government to crack down on nudist magazines and publications. Finally, in the late 1950s the US Supreme Court ruled in favor of nudist magazines, and declared that media that showed genitals were not obscene. This legalized the entire nudist magazine industry in the United States, but it was already legalized throughout Europe. The US Supreme court has since ruled on this subject multiple times.

Operation Yellow Sentinel

When the US Supreme Court ruled in favor of nudist magazines starting in the late 1950s, and declared that media that showed genitals were not obscene, this set a standard that mere nudity itself is not obscene. The legality of nudist publications included the right to show naked images of children. This has been the hallmark of nudist magazines since then - showing whole families naked and enjoying the nudist lifestyle. And the US Supreme court has ruled on this subject multiple times. There are some countries in the world that take a more restrictive view, such as Australia and New Zealand, but their statutes only apply to those who live there and not the rest of the world citizens.

Operation Yellow Sentinel

Operation Yellow Sentinel

According to the most reliable scientific research, the ape ancestors of humans lost almost all their body hair about one and a half million years ago. Almost all hair, of course, except for the head, armpits and pubic areas on women, and the addition of facial hair on men. Anatomically modern humans lived for hundreds of thousands of years completely naked, until about eighty thousand years ago our ancestors decided to invent and wear clothing.

Humans have happily spent most of their history living their entire lives completely naked, and these facts are available to us now due to rigorous scientific analysis. However, the major world religions didn't have these facts available to them when they wrote their holy texts, and now most human societies have a negative view of nudity even though it's our most natural state.

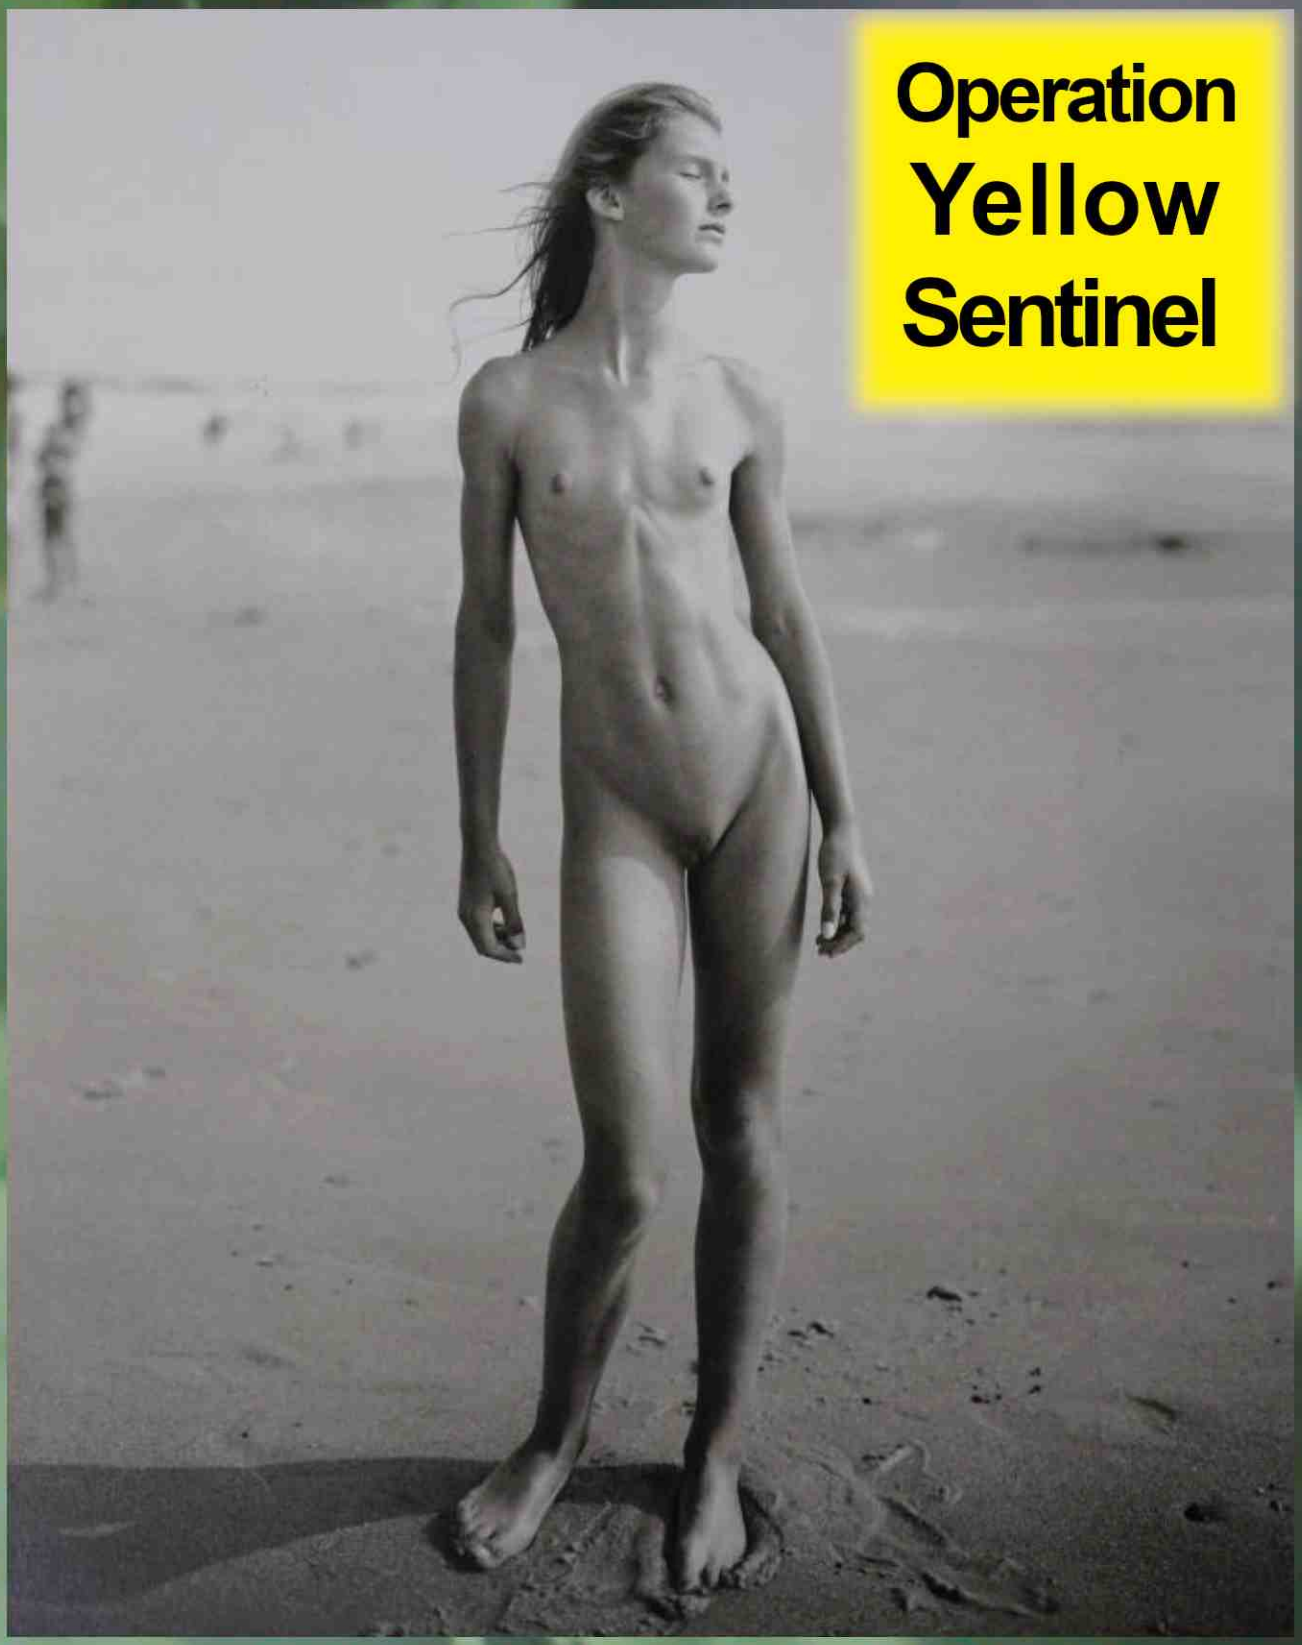
Clothes generally don't make a person happy, and the practitioners of nudism and the nudist lifestyle have demonstrated to the world for over a hundred years now that true contentment and happiness can be found in the simple lifestyle of living your life without any clothes.

Operation Yellow Sentinel

Jock Sturges, an American fine arts photographer, knows all too well the witch hunts the FBI and US-based Christian fundamentalists are capable of. In spite of the being the target of much evangelical ire and hate due to his nude portraits, he has prevailed in all legal challenges against his photographs of nudist families.

The lesson to be learned from Sturges life is that America is full of self-loathing individuals who feel compelled to cling to a religion that saddles them with guilt and despair, and lash out at anything that resembles actual freedom and joy. They live a life full of emptiness and self-reproach, and have a compulsive need to make sure everyone else in the world is as miserable as they are.

On the other hand, nudists who live a life of bare naked simplicity are among the least judgmental and most contented people you will ever meet. Hippie communes in Northern California were a frequent location for Jock Sturges photography, and you can see the radiant delight in their faces. Anyone who has spent a bit of time around nudists know the simple contentment a naked lifestyle can bring.



Operation
Yellow
Sentinel

Some five million years ago, humans and chimpanzees diverged in their evolution. Humans have since gone on to form complex civilizations, sprawling cities, and even landed on the moon. Bonobos, on the other hand, have presumably continued to exist in the same basic social structure as they did five million years ago. Some humans consider that progress, but others – like Theodore J. Kaczynski – theorize that modern society has been a disaster for the human race. Either way, it is unmistakable that modern human society has completely and totally abandoned any connection to the primitive societies of long ago. And yet, scientists who study Bonobos for a living find that these cousins of ours have well adjusted and peaceful societies that humans can't duplicate.

It has only been a hundred and sixty-seven years since Charles Darwin wrote "On the Origin of Species" and even into the 1980s his work was still considered controversial in America. Charles Darwin was controversial because his science laid a philosophical foundation that allowed the legitimate questioning of the Protestant biblical-based world view. The heart of the problem here is that western societies really don't want to acknowledge that humans are just another species of animal. Calling a person an animal brings up all kinds of political and cultural baggage that smacks of old prejudices. Apparently it's painful and embarrassing for humans to admit they are a species of animal. It takes away the greatness that their religion gives them.

The legacy of Christianity in America is unmistakable. The first English settlers that came to the continent did so because they had a strict and devout interpretation of the gospel of Jesus Christ that even the contemporary British societies found extreme and out of touch. These pilgrims felt persecuted and decided to find a new place to live where they could practice their religion in peace. The Puritan influence was so powerful that in 1692 they executed nineteen of their own people in a hysterical witch hunt that has come to symbolize the worst tendencies of Christian fundamentalists. American society seems to uniquely and particularly hamstrung by the puritan Christian legacy that even today influences politics and shapes public policy. This legacy led to the "Creationism" movement in the 1970s and 1980s, caused activists to push for abortion bans that culminated in the Dobbs v. Jackson Women's Health Organization decision that overturned Roe v. Wade, and is the reason why Donald Trump won a second presidential term in 2024.

American citizens are astonishingly ignorant of basic science, and American students have consistently score well below all other first world countries in math and science subjects. This is another legacy of the Puritan influence on American society. Sound and unquestionable scientific principles are banned from school curriculum because it offends some people's Christian beliefs. This in turn leads to ignorant adults who become ignorant voters. And ignorant voters like to vote for ignorant political candidates. And so the cycle of ignorance is perpetuated to the next generation. In the historical context, Christianity had key principles like "blessed are the poor in spirit" and the Golden Rule. But American puritanical Christianity puts more emphasis on culling the herd and fighting the good fight than the traditional catholic creeds. And this has led America to become a uniquely violent and destructive society compared to any other first world country.

Operation Yellow Sentinel

The underlying problem that continues the perpetuation of these destructive cycles is the American belief that the US itself is divinely created. To the average American mind, it is a city on a hill, it is a shining beacon of liberty and was created by the hand of Jesus himself. It's very difficult to have a logical debate on the subject of science with someone who has a borderline delusional belief in the perfection of their own country. And these American delusions are manifesting themselves in many ways now. The US executive branch is now making the delusional claim that Tylenol causes autism, and that vaccines are a hoax. US states are banning abortion and prosecuting women for having miscarriages. American universities are removing studies on the historical legacy of racism and purging textbook that mention transgender identity. These are the behaviors of a society that is moving backward toward the dark ages, and the rife superstitions that were its hallmark.

There have of course been intentional communities that have popped up in America here and there over the course of the last sixty years or so. Some have been called hippie communes. Some have been called religious cults. One thing they all have in common is that they rarely last. They rarely last because the nature of American capitalism and property ownership makes it difficult to buy a parcel of land that can support a group of people and maintain the property taxes even if there is no mortgage. The Amish are probably the most successful intentional community in American history, but part of their success is due to them being even more fundamentalist in their Christian beliefs, not less. American authorities tend to work extra hard at dismantling intentional communities that have pagan or eastern religious foundations, because even though in theory the US first amendment allows freedom of religion, in practice it is subject to the whims of the fickle townsfolk and their pitchforks and torches.

Probably the most successful non-Christian intentional community in the world is the Freetown Christiania commune in Denmark, which has been continuous operation for fifty-four years. It started when squatters started living on an abandoned military base, and grew from there. That type of formation is mostly not possible in America, because squatting is rarely tolerated in America, and certainly not a large group of squatters. It all goes back to capitalism and American landowner philosophies.

Americans are a lot of things, but happy is not one of them. The supposed "American Dream" requires much blood, sweat and tears, and there is no actual happiness in that quest. Americans believe in the Declaration of Independence phrase "The pursuit of Happiness" and it would seem that almost all Americans fixate on the PURSUIT portion of that phrase and never really know what actual happiness is. On the other hand, our Bonobo cousins live content and joyous lives, and they are unencumbered by mortgage payments, car payments, fashionable clothes or other status trappings. But emulating Bonobo happiness would require Americans to acknowledge that science is true and that they are in fact our cousins, and that is a bridge too far for most.

Operation Yellow Sentinel

In the 1960s and 1970s in America, the peace movement and Hippie lifestyle became a worldwide phenomenon. “Make love, not war” was a common refrain in this era. In the ensuing years, we’ve had yuppies and Reaganism and “greed is good” thrown at us. And it’s made the western world absolutely miserable. In over five thousand years of written human language, we have documentation and proof of the ebbs and flows of what human moral values can look like. What was worshiped in one millennium is an atrocity in the next. The thing that has stayed the same in all written texts, and even the common traits humans share with bonobos, is kindness and love. It is the only thing that can be considered a universal moral value. Maybe if humans make more love, and less war, the planet would be a better place.

Operation Yellow Sentinel

A major consequence of the western cultural refusal to acknowledge that humans are animals is reflected in very twisted psychological conceptualizations towards sexual relationships. Western culture has elevated sex to some kind of Pandora's Box that can only be used in the inter-sanctum of the proper temple, otherwise demons and evil will be unleashed. This notion is utter foolishness. All mammals have sex, and they do so without any consideration of proper procedure or incantation. Apparently in the western culture, acknowledging that humans are animals means that sex has no particular meaning, other than an inherent biological urge of a species that uses it to reproduce itself. And they can't wrap their feeble minds around this paradigm shift.

Especially in America, parents don't want their schools and teachers to educate their kids about sex, but they also don't want to teach their own kids about sex either. They would rather just keep them completely in the dark. But humans are biological animals with a built-in instinct for how to reproduce. Humans, being the animals that they are, will have sex with or without any instructions from anyone else. But under western cultural albatrosses, after kids do have sex, they are told that Jesus is disgusted by them and they need to wear their guilt like an iron chain and grovel in the dirt for the rest of their lives.

This twisted psychological conceptualization towards sex leaves the entire society spinning and flailing to find some kind of mental balance between two diametrically opposed forces. In a logical and reasonable world, the citizens of a society would be taught sound scientific principles that help them understand their place in the evolution of the world and the universe. But since that requires putting aside religious dogma for the good of the truth, that seems to be an untenable proposition.

The idea that sex can be fun and pleasurable, and doesn't need to have any commitment or deeper meaning other than the sheer carnality itself is a sound theory if one acknowledges that humans are just one among many millions of animals. If one's religious beliefs are more important than believing in the actual truth, that is their choice. The psychological burdens that come with it are also their choice. But as someone somewhere once wrote, you shall know the truth, and the truth shall set you free.

Emily Sparkles is an adventurous and uninhibited 12 year old girl. She loves nude modeling, and has been posing nude as a figure model for over 2 years now. She loves being free to be naked in any place, and the attention it brings. Her favorite color is lavender, and she likes the smell of daisies after a rainstorm.

She recently started going through puberty, and her breasts have started growing. She was growing thin hairs on her vulva and labia, but she decided to wax them to keep her little girl look. Emily has discovered the simple joy of masturbation, and the pleasure she can give herself simply by rubbing her fingers on her clitoris. She likes to sneak a bit of butter from her parents kitchen, and use it as lubrication to rub and stimulate her clitoris until she has an orgasm. She thinks it is the greatest feeling in the world. She has also discovered she has a crush on several boys. She is just waiting for one of them to show enough courage to touch her and make love to her. She fantasizes about a penis penetrating her vagina, but none of her schoolgirl crushes have been bold enough to try to have their way with her. Emily is starting to wonder if an older guy is maybe better at satisfying her lust.

Emily is very happy to have a wonderful life being a nude model.

Then she would have more freedom to live her life the way she wants, instead of politicians telling her how to live her life.

Masturbation

Operation Yellow Sentinel

Frequency, age, and sex

Frequency of masturbation is determined by many factors, e.g., one's resistance to sexual tension, hormone levels influencing sexual arousal, sexual habits, peer influences, health and one's attitude to masturbation formed by culture; E. Heiby and J. Becker examined the latter.[44] Medical causes have also been associated with masturbation, wherein masturbation is not cause, but effect,[45][46][47] with the exception of inserting foreign objects into the urinary bladder.[48]

Different studies have found that masturbation is frequent in humans. Alfred Kinsey's 1950s studies on the US population have shown that 92% of men and 62% of women have masturbated during their lifespan.[26] Similar results have been found in a 2007 British national probability survey. It was found that, among individuals aged 16 to 44, 95% of men and 71% of women masturbated at some point in their lives. 73% of men and 37% of women reported masturbating in the four weeks before their interview, while 53% of men and 18% of women reported masturbating in the previous seven days.[49]

The Merck Manual says that 97% of men and 80% of women have masturbated and that, generally speaking, males masturbate more than females.[50][51][52] It states that almost half of the population reported to have masturbated in the past four weeks.[53]

Masturbation is considered normal when performed by children,[54][55][56] even in early infancy.[45][57][58] In 2009, the Sheffield NHS Health Trust issued a pamphlet called "Pleasure" which discussed the health benefits of masturbation. This was done in response to data and experience from the other EU member states to reduce teen pregnancy and STIs (STDs), and to promote healthy habits.[59]

According to the New Oxford Textbook of Psychiatry (1st ed.), "Masturbation and sexual play are common well before puberty. Sexual behaviour in young children is common, and should only be regarded as a sign of sexual abuse when it is out of context and is inappropriate."[60]

In the book Human Sexuality: Diversity in Contemporary America, by Strong, Devault and Sayad, the authors point out, "A baby boy may laugh in his crib while playing with his erect penis". "Baby girls sometimes move their bodies rhythmically, almost violently, appearing to experience orgasm."[61] Italian gynecologists Giorgio Giorgi and Marco Siccardi observed via ultrasound a female fetus possibly masturbating and having what appeared to be an orgasm.[62]
